SAFETY: Laser Hair Removal at the Bay Cherrise and Veronica.

Safety key to clinic

LASER Hair Removal at the Bay staff feel nothing is more important than the safety of clients and education of its team.

Veronica Denwick, a registered nurse, owner and operator of the clinic, has worked in the laser hair removal industry for 13 years and is proud to say her clinic has been set up in accordance with the strictest of safety policies.

The clinic meets all the guidelines of the Australian/New Zealand Standards to ensure the highest standard of safety for clients.

Laser Hair Removal at the Bay demonstrates this high standard of safety by only employing nurses, not beauty therapists.

All its nurses hold laser safety certificates and have had extensive laser training to ensure the safest possible treatments for clients.

Veronica has always been passionate about providing the safest practice for her clients based on the latest education available in the industry.

She often attends laser conferences both in Australia and overseas.

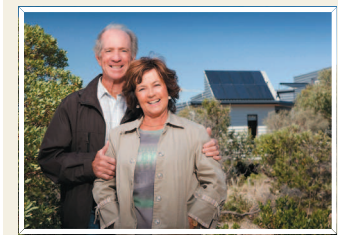

This month, Veronica and her staff will attend the annual American Society for Laser Medicine and Surgery (ASLMS) conference held in Boston, in the United States.

The ASLMS promotes excellence in patient care by advancing the application of lasers and other related technologies worldwide.

The Laser Hair Removal at the Bay team will join nearly 3000 other individuals who work with medical lasers in a clinical, research and business environment in a bid to expand their knowledge of the use, safety and regulations of medical lasers.

Quality in solar services

RECENT developments in the solar industry, including the collapse of some operators, have caused a major divide between the haves and have nots among households.

Now more than ever, the saying 'you get what you pay for' is proving true.

Thousands of households have solar panels and have made large investments in solar. Those that have opted for quality are reaping the greatest rewards.

Unfortunately, many are being burnt by poor cut-price systems and their solar systems are failing.

ZEN Energy Systems is Australia's first fully branded and integrated home, business and utility-scale solar energy system provider. ZEN is 100 per cent Australian owned and operated. The company constantly receives calls from customers of other solar companies who are stuck with cheap and inadequate systems.

ZEN chief executive officer Richard Turner believes discount companies need to be heavily scrutinised.
